

MADE IN ITALY: CONTEMPORARY ARCHAEOLOGIES OF AGRIBUSINESS' ENCAMPMENT ARCHIPELAGO

The seminar will sketch out the main outline of my manuscript project: starting from the farmworkers' encampments that today dot Italy's agribusiness enclaves, by means of material and/as archival clues I trace their genealogies throughout the (contemporary) history of agrocapitalism. Since the late 18th century, in several regions of southern Italy the ongoing primitive accumulation that was offset by the transition from feudal to capitalist farming has been accompanied by processes of expulsion and containment that recur in often uncanny ways. Their spatial dimension is particularly striking, and the focus of my work. If farm workers' "slums" in all their variations have been the object of public concern, planning and intervention across the contemporary era, putative spatial solutions against their alleged "threat" have displayed features that straddle carceral, settler-colonial and camp dimensions. By means of case studies from two such enclaves, the Apulian Tavoliere and the Plain of Gioia Tauro, I engage in a detailed reconstruction of these fragmented and often occluded histories of containment and resistance.

Irene Peano (PhD, Social Anthropology, University of Cambridge) is a Research Fellow at the Institute of Social Sciences, University of Lisbon, and a member of the Beyond Inhabitation Lab's steering committee. Her work has focused on labour and migration (with particular reference to sexual and agricultural work) across Italy, Nigeria and Eastern Europe through methods which place long-term engagement and solidarity at the centre of her research. Currently, she is working on a manuscript which investigates the material, spatial, symbolic and affective stratifications of mobility and labour control, and of forms of resistance against them, by reference to the development of Italian agro-capitalism in two of Italy's agroindustrial enclaves, the Apulian Tavoliere and the Plain of Gioia Tauro.
